Brief History of Durham - Before Europeans arrived, two Native American tribes – the Eno and the Occaneechi (related to the Sioux), lived and farmed here. Durham is thought to be the site of an ancient Native American village named Adshusheer. Many settlements formed along the “The Great Indian Trading Path” which ran through Durham. From the mid-1700’s through the mid-1800’s, Scottish, Irish, and English colonists settled on land granted to John Carteret, Earl of Granville, by King Charles I (for whom the Carolinas are named). Farming and processing of the foods grown were the main industries. In 1849, Dr. Bartlett Durham, for whom the city is named, provided land for a railroad station, and the community of Durham Station grew up around it. Following the Civil War, this community expanded rapidly, in part due to the tobacco industry. The textile and electric-power industries also played an important role. In the 1950’s-60’s, what is now the world’s largest university-related research park, the Research Triangle region was carved from Durham pinelands as a special Durham County tax district. One of Durham’s legacy nicknames is the “Bull City,” now signified by a full-size, bronze statue in the City Center District of Downtown. But the nickname isn’t related to livestock. John Green of the Blackwell Tobacco Company named his product “Bull” Durham Tobacco after seeing it used on containers of Coleman’s Mustard, which Green mistakenly thought was produced in Durham’s Sister City, Durham, England. By the time James B. Duke and the American Tobacco Company purchased Blackwell in 1898, Bull Durham was the most famous trademark in the world.

You will pass numerous restaurants on the trail, particularly around the Historic Durham Athletic Park, the downtown area and near the Durham Bulls Athletic Park.

POI #1 American Tobacco Campus - After the Civil War, George Washington Duke concentrated on farming Bright Leaf tobacco, as this was the only crop still intact on his farm. His business expanded rapidly from 1870-1890, growing from a shed on his farm to a series of factories in downtown Durham. Eventually 4 of his biggest rivals joined him, and the American Tobacco Company was formed, guided by Duke's four sons. The company was one of the original 12 members of the Dow Jones Industrial Average in 1896. In 1911, antitrust action broke the company into several smaller companies.

POI #2 The Bee Mural - titled "Swarm", is part of the "Good of the Hive Initiative", founded by artist Matthew Willey. Willey has committed to personally painting 50,000 honeybees – the number necessary for a healthy, thriving hive – in murals across America. The goal is to raise awareness about the importance of honeybees and other pollinators in our food chain. As of April 2024, 10,254 bees have been painted!

POI #3 The Museum of Durham History - began to take shape in 2004 when Durham's Cultural Master Plan recognized that a local history museum should be one of the community's highest priorities. The museum has become a centrally located facility that took an array of existing programs and a number of walking tours and knitted them together into a coherent story of Durham's past and its relevance to the present. The museum is open Tuesdays through Saturdays 10-5, and Sundays 1-5. Free admission.

POI #4 Brightleaf - occupies the former Watts and Yuille Tobacco warehouses. The warehouses were built between 1900 and 1904 as part of an aggressive building campaign by the American Tobacco Company for storing, aging, and fermenting tobacco for cigarette manufacture. The building now houses restaurants, retail shops and small businesses.

POI #5 The Baldwin Auditorium – was designed by African American architect Julian F. Abele, and first opened in 1927. The auditorium recently underwent a $15 million renovation, transforming it into one of the premiere small venues for classical music in the Southeast, with a seating capacity of 685.

POI #6 The Pearl Mill - was established by Brodie Duke in 1892 and named after his daughter Pearl. After Brodie Duke suffered significant financial reversal in the 'Panic of 1893', Washington Duke and his two half-brothers helped him re-capitalize the company, along with George Watts, who became the new president of the company. By 1895, the mill had 200 workers, 10,000 spindles, and 160 looms "for making extra-wide sheeting".

POI #7 The Historic Durham Athletic Park – was originally named El Toro Park when it was first built in 1926. This park served as the home of the Minor League Durham Bulls for almost 70 years. It was the location of the 1988 movie Bull Durham.

POI #8 The Carolina Theatre – was built in 1925-1926, and remains as the last of thirteen original theatres in the city. It was most recently renovated in 2011. Besides the main stage, the building also houses two movie theaters and two elegant event spaces. The theatre was the first theatre in Durham to admit African-Americans; an exhibit commemorating the Carolina Theatre's role in desegregation is located on the second floor.

POI #9 The Bull - has been a symbol associated with the Durham area dating back to the 1800s, when in the post-Civil War era merchant John R. Green branded his product "Bull" Durham Tobacco. In 1898, James B. Duke bought Green's tobacco company, making it a part of his American Tobacco Company, thus increasing Durham's national reputation as a tobacco-manufacturing center. Durham has been known as the "Bull City" ever since. The statue was given to the citizens of Durham in the memory of bank president and WWII veteran, Major George Watts Hill.

POI #10 DPAC - The Durham Performing Arts Center opened in 2008 and hosts over 200 performances each year. DPAC regularly ranks in the top 5 theaters in the US, with annual attendance topping 400,000.

POI #11 The Durham Bulls Athletic Park - is a 10,000-seat ballpark that is home to the Durham Bulls; the Triple-AAA affiliate of the Tampa Bay Rays. The park opened in 1995 when it succeeded the Durham Athletic Park, which you passed earlier during this walk. The Bulls were originally a Class A-Advanced Team, moving up to Triple AAA status in 1998. If there isn't a game, you should be able to access the steps for a view of the interior of the ballpark
