Simpsonville History

Incorporated on August 13, 1901, Simpsonville began many decades earlier as a crossroads hamlet where the Old Stage Road intersected a former Cherokee trail, later named the Georgia Road. Residents of northeast Laurens County became Simpsonville's first businessmen. In 1838 the farmer Peter Simpson arrived and established a blacksmithing operation, followed shortly thereafter by the merchant Silas Gilbert, who opened a general store. In that same year the locale was assigned a post office called Plain. As Simpson's services grew in popularity, the crossroads became known as Simpsonville. However, in 1853 the Greenville and Columbia Railroad was completed several miles east of Simpsonville and siphoned off wagon trade and brought growth in the village to a standstill through Reconstruction.

After the war members of the local African American population left the churches of former slaveowners and organized Cedar Grove Baptist Church in 1870, the first church within the modern city limits. Completion of the Greenville and Laurens Railroad near Simpsonville in the mid-1880s brought further change. A high school was built, and a merchant, Sidney J. Wilson, surveyed land for a town and began selling lots. In 1886 the Plain post office officially became Simpsonville. Soon the town became a cotton-processing hub, claiming three gins and a cottonseed oil mill by 1900. That same year the Simpsonville population reached four hundred. In 1907 town representatives solicited the brothers John and Edward Woodside to build the Simpsonville Cotton Mill, which remained the town's largest employer until after World War II.

Schools enjoyed a great deal of attention. In 1911 the Simpsonville Music College was established, and in 1915 the high school issued the first state diplomas in Greenville County. Also, between 1921 and 1940, the Simpsonville High School girls' basketball team, the "Whirlwind," amassed 303 wins and four state championships.

During the Depression of the 1930s, the Farmer's Bank of Simpsonville was one of the few banks in Greenville County that did not fail, but Simpsonville remained a stagnant agricultural center until 1953, when the Greenville Water Works extended its system through the towns of Mauldin, Simpsonville, and Fountain Inn. The towns served by this new water line, dubbed the "Golden Strip" by a local reporter, became attractive locations for industrial development in the early 1960s. A simultaneous demand for new housing and the widening of U.S. Highway 276 in 1956 laid the foundation for further expansion. In the 1980s Simpsonville began attracting residential overflow from the Greenville-Spartanburg metropolitan area. Industry accelerated on Simpsonville's periphery along Interstate 385, and houses were purchased by employees in the larger urban areas as well as by local workers. Between 1970 and 1990 Simpsonville's population grew 254 percent. An additional increase of more than 13 percent from 1990 to 1992 made Simpsonville the fastest-growing city in the state. As Simpsonville responded to the effects of suburban sprawl, city officials worked to combine efforts to encourage growth while preserving the ambient appeal of the small-town core.

Points Of Interest

1: 101 East Curtis Street – across Curtis. The oldest brick building in Simpsonville was built by Sidney J. Wilson in 1886. He called it Wilson's Store — and there he carried a line of dry goods and groceries, feed, and seed. Three pharmacists used the building from 1913 to 1969, and over the course of time the upstairs was used as a hat & watch shop, doctor's office, dentist's office, telephone company's first office, a law office, and apartments. An addition was made in 1924, and a restaurant currently occupies that space. There you will find a soda fountain back-bar which was (as story has it) shipped from Atlanta shortly before the city was burned in 1864 by Union Major General William T. Sherman. Event Décor and More & Rest

2: 302 South Main Street - The Garden House Bed & Breakfast started out as a one-story house in 1905, the home of the Simpsonville Mill's first president, Edward F. Woodside. After many renovations and additions, it became the three-story building (with five bedrooms and as many bathrooms) seen today.

3. Warehouse at Vaughn's -Great place to stop for lunch or an adult-beverage after the walk! A new community venue featuring outdoor/indoor dining, a container courtyard and live music! Businesses include Trade Street Market, Bourbon Street Burgers, The Tap House, Southern Freight and more!

4. 125 South Main Street - Ice Cream Station was the old train depot building was built in 1960 by SAL Railroads. The present building replaced an old Victorian wooden train station. The Simpsonville Chamber of Commerce was located here from 1980 to 1998. It has been renovated and is now an ice cream shop.

5: Between North Main and Northeast Main Streets. The Clock Tower was built in 1986 by Waldrop Construction Services, owned by current Mayor, Dennis Waldrop. A group of downtown business leaders and property owners commissioned it to improve the downtown and stimulate business. It was funded by Ralph Hendricks' donation. The tower was engineered with a rigid steel inner structure to withstand 200 mile per hour winds. It has become an iconic part of Simpsonville.

6. 102 South Main Street - Howard's Pharmacy is the oldest existing drug store in Simpsonville. It has been in business since 1934, and the first-floor dates to 1912.

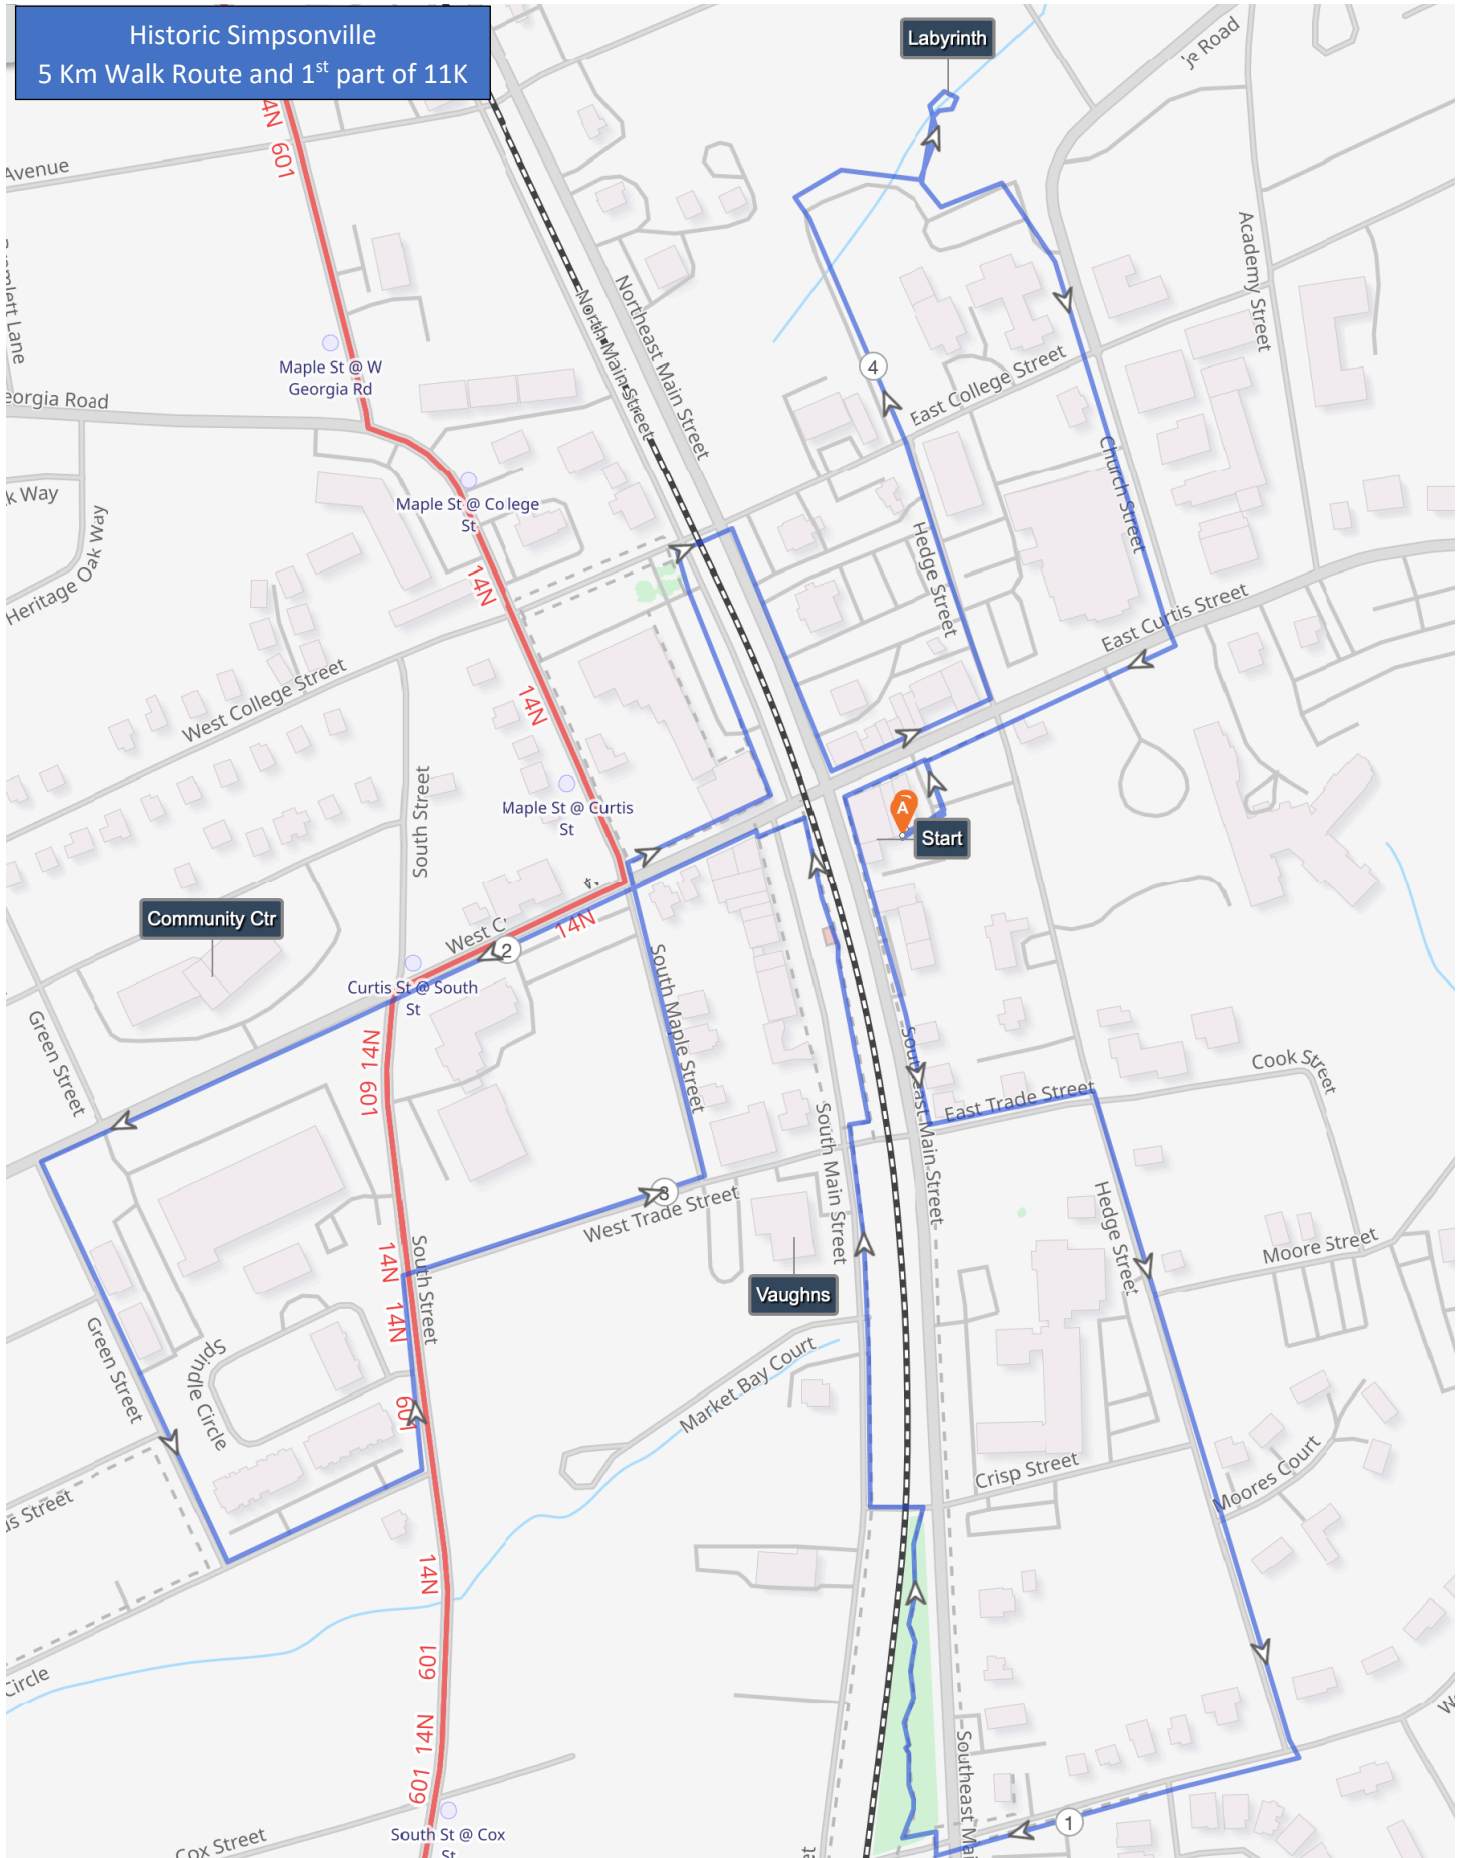

7. 300 South Street - Built in 1907 at the corner of West Curtis and South Streets, the Simpsonville Cotton Mill soon became part of the Woodside Cotton Mill Company. It brought much residential and commercial growth to Simpsonville, employing 622 people early in 1988. In 1989 the mill closed. It was named 14th most significant building in Greenville County history by the county Historic Preservations Commission. It was converted into commercial space and loft condominiums and today it is called Cotton Mill Place. The Simpsonville Cotton Mill Water Tower was built in 1908.

8: Corner of North Main and West College Streets This statue is in honor of Dr. Lawrence Lafayette Richardson. Richardson was a physician for 64 years, Mayor of Simpsonville for 38 years, and Chairman of the Simpsonville School Board for 20 years. He was responsible for bringing natural gas into the city and led efforts to develop the city park.

9. Mural On the side of the Curtis Street building is a low-relief mural titled “Balancing Act,” commissioned by Provident Community Bank. It represents tradition and change in Simpsonville. The train and heels stand for hard work and progress, and Simpsonville's history as a 19th century center of transportation. The bell is associated with the textile industry, the anvil with the blacksmith, the geometric forms of basketry with the Cherokee tradition, and the pointed arch with Simpsonville's faith. All are carefully balanced as Simpsonville moves forward into the 21st century

10. Burdette Central, SE corner of SE Main and Curtis. Begun in 1899, Burdette Hardware was a family business. The store was both a retail and a community gathering place that welcomed everyone in good times and bad. At certain points it housed a shirt factory as well as a hardware store, and B.W. Burdette, the founder, paid close attention to the business, his family and the community. Kids and grandkids and great-grandkids ran through this place and helped make it work, thousands of Simpsonville residents did business or chewed the fat here, African-Americans were treated here with more grace and respect than was usual back in those days, and the Burdette's took the time to listen to, care for, and demonstrate respect for all of their neighbors. As one of the most important businesses of its time, the building today holds landmark status.
