About the Boggy Creek Area:

Boggy Creek runs through East Austin on its way to join the Colorado River east of route 183. Over the years, flooding has been a problem, and in the late 1980's a concrete channel was built on parts of the creek to keep nearby neighborhoods from flooding.

The Pillars Project, started in 2021 by Austin Parks Foundation and various neighborhood and art groups, has painted the pillars you will pass on your walk. Each pillar tells the story of an individual or family who is revered in this East Austin Community.

Rosewood Park land was bought by the City of Austin from the Bertram-Huppertz Family in 1928, and was turned into a segregated park for the African American community. Your walk route will pass many historical buildings in the park.

The 10 km route takes you to the Boggy Creek Farm. Plan to spend a few minutes viewing the vegetable gardens, the chickens, and the historic farmhouse. Construction of the Farmhouse at Boggy Creek Farm was completed in 1841, making it one of the two oldest homes still standing in Austin today. It is similar in style to the French Legation, also built in 1841.
