HISTORIC ROGERSVILLE

Rogersville was settled in 1775 by the grandparents of Davy Crockett. It is the second-oldest town in the state of Tennessee. More than 30 homes and buildings are on the National Register of Historic Places, including the second oldest courthouse, first post office and first newspaper (1791) in Tennessee. Walk by Rogers Tavern build by Joseph Rogers in 1786. Legend has it that a stranger sought a room at the tavern and was offered a room that he could share with two other gentlemen. The stranger made some disparaging remarks about a town that could not offer a gentleman a private room. Another guest, overhearing the remarks, grabbed the stranger, threw him into the corncrib out back, and demanded an apology. The guest who demanded the apology was Andrew Jackson. Stroll through Crockett Springs Park where Davy Crockett's grandparents built their log cabin. They were killed by Indians in 1777 and buried in the Rogers Cemetery. See the Tennessee Newspaper and Printing Museum located in the old Southern Railway Train Depot built in 1890. Admission is free but is only open by appointment (423-272-5171). See the Swift Museum which is all that remains of the Swift Memorial College founded by the Presbyterian Church as a school similar to Maryville College for the education of the Freedmen following the close of the Civil War. The historic Hale Springs Inn was built in 1824 and is still in operation (at a bargain $99 a night) with nine rooms including three presidential suites names for the Presidents who have stayed here (Jackson, Johnson, and Polk).
